

Maria Iren Fornes

Scott T. Cummings

ROUTLEDGE

Routledge Modern and Contempo

Maria Irene Fornes

Maria Irene Fornes is the most influential female American dramatist of the twentieth century. That is the argument of this important new study, the first to assess Fornes's complete body of work.

Scott T. Cummings considers comic sketches, opera libretti and unpublished pieces, as well as her best-known plays, in order to trace the evolution of her dramaturgy from the whimsical Off-Off Broadway plays of the 1960s to the sober, meditative work of the 1990s. The book also reflects on her practice as an inspirational teacher of playwriting and the primary director of her own plays.

Drawing on the latest scholarship and his own personal research and interviews with Fornes over two decades, Cummings examines Fornes's unique significance and outlines strategies for understanding her fragmentary, enigmatic, highly demanding theater.

Scott T. Cummings is Chair of the Theatre Department of Boston College, where he directs plays and teaches courses in playwriting and dramatic literature. He is the author of Remaking American Theater: Charles Mee, Anne Bogart and the SITI Company, as well as numerous performance reviews, journal articles, and essays on contemporary American theater and drama.

ROUTLEDGE MODERN AND CONTEMPORARY DRAMATISTS

Series editor: Maggie B. Gale and Mary Luckhurst

Routledge Modern and Contemporary Dramatists is a new series of innovative and exciting critical introductions to the work of internationally pioneering playwrights. The series includes recent and well-established playwrights and offers primary materials on contemporary dramatists who are under-represented in secondary criticism. Each volume provides detailed cultural, historical and political material, examines selected plays in production, and theorises the playwright's artistic agenda and working methods, as well as their contribution to the development of playwriting and theatre.

Volumes currently available in the series are:

J. B. Priestley by Maggie B. Gale

Federico Garcia Lorca by Maria M. Delgado

Susan Gaspell and Sophie Treadwell by Jerry Dickey and Barbara Oziebo

August Strindberg by Eszter Szalczer

Anton Chekhov by Rose Whyman

Jean Genet by David Bradby and Clare Finburgh

Future volumes will include:

Mark Ravenhill by John F. Deeney

Caryl Churchill by Mary Luckhurst

Brian Friel by Anna McMullan

Sarah Kane by Chris Megson

Maria Irene Fornes

Routledge Modern and Contemporary Dramatists

Scott T. Cummings

Routledge
Taylor & Francis Group

LONDON AND NEW YORK

First published 2013
by Routledge
2 Park Square, Milton Park, Abingdon, Oxon OX14 4RN

Simultaneously published in the USA and Canada
by Routledge
711 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10017

Routledge is an imprint of the Taylor & Francis Group, an informa business

© 2013 Scott T. Cummings

The right of Scott T. Cummings to be identified as author of this work has been asserted by him in accordance with sections 77 and 78 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reprinted or reproduced or utilised in any form or by any electronic, mechanical, or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publishers.

Trademark notice: Product or corporate names may be trademarks or registered trademarks, and are used only for identification and explanation without intent to infringe.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Cummings, Scott T., 1953-

Maria Irene Fornes / by Scott T. Cummings.

p. cm. – (Routledge modern and contemporary dramatists)

Includes bibliographical references and index.

1. Fornes, Maria Irene – Criticism and interpretation.

2. Theater – Production and direction – New York (State) –

New York – History – 20th century. I. Title.

PS3556.O7344Z68 2012

812'.54 – dc23

2012002519

ISBN: 978-0-415-45434-6 (hbk)

ISBN: 978-0-415-45435-3 (pbk)

ISBN: 978-0-203-81621-9 (ebk)

Typeset in Sabon

by Taylor & Francis Books

for Peter Ferran
(he knows why)

Contents

List of illustrations	xi
Acknowledgements	xv
Overview	xviii

PART I

The 1960s

“Let me be wrong. But also not know it.”	1
1 Getting started	3
Bohemian roots: growing up in Havana	5
Bohemian roots: settling in Greenwich Village	7
Tango Palace (1963)	11
A metatheatrical conceit	12
2 Off-Off Broadway: the good scene	17
Cino, Judson, La MaMa, and others	18
The Open Theatre connection	21
The Successful Life of 3 (1965)	24
The Office (1966)	27
Dr. Kheal (1968)	28
A Vietnamese Wedding (1967)	30
The Red Burning Light Or: Mission XQ3 (1968)	32

- 3 Key play: Promenade (the apotheosis of Judson) 35
- The Judson Poets' Theater* 36
  - Promenade as a one-act with "a lot of music" in 1965* 37
  - Promenade as a full-length musical in 1969* 40
  - Molly's Dream (1973)* 44

PART II

The 1970s

"If we're showing what life is, can be, we must do theatre." 49

- 4 Finding a way 51

- New York Theatre Strategy* 52
- Aurora (1974)* 54
- INTAR and the Hispanic Playwrights-in-Residence Laboratory* 56
- Cap-a-Pie (1975)* 58
- Eyes on the Harem (1979)* 60

- 5 Key play: Fefu and Her Friends (turning over the stone) 64

- Fefu and Her Friends: the basic action* 65
- Fefu and Her Friends: the experimental second act* 69
- Fefu and Her Friends at At the Foot of the Mountain* 71
- Fefu and Her Friends at the Yale Repertory Theatre* 73

Part III

The 1980s

"I have to learn how to lead my life." 77

- 6 Found 79

- Theater for the New City* 80
- Padua Hills* 81
- Fondness for the Found* 83
- Evelyn Brown (A Diary) (1980)* 87

	A Visit (1981)	90
	The Trial of Joan of Arc in a Matter of Faith (1986)	92
7	The PAJ Plays		96
	The Danube (1983)	97
	“Irene time”	101
	Mud (1983)	102
	Sarita (1984)	105
	The “emotigraph” as unit of construction	107
	The Conduct of Life (1985)	111
	The rhetoric of space/the space of rhetoric	113
8	Key play: Abingdon Square (conquering the vagueness)		117
	Teaching playwriting	118
	Lovers and Keepers (1986)	121
	Abingdon Square: genesis and production history	123
	Abingdon Square: Marion as Fornes Innocent	125
	Abingdon Square: the process of imagination	126
	“ The Poetry of Space in a Box: ” scenography and Fornes’s orchestration of space	131
PART IV
The 1990s
	“ Where are we in relation to all this? ”		135
9	The Night Plays		137
	What of the Night? (1989)	139
	Oscar and Bertha (1992)	144
	Enter the Night (1993)	146
	Manual For a Desperate Crossing (Balseros/Rafters) (1997)	150
	Terra Incognita (1997)	152
10	Coming to an end		157
	The Summer in Gossensass (1998)	158
	Fornes and Hedda Gabler	161

Letters from Cuba (2000) 164
Legacy 169
Drowning as paradigm 171
“This must be made by a person.” 173

Appendix A: selected production history 178
Appendix B: plays in publication 188
Bibliography 194
Index 203

List of illustrations

Cover image: Boston College Theatre Department production of Abingdon Square (2004), directed by Scott T. Cummings. Mairin Lee as Marion. Photo by Lee Pellegrini.

- 1 Maria Irene Fornes in her Sheridan Square apartment with her mother Carmen (1990). Photo by Robert Giard, copyright Jonathan Silin. xvii
- 2 Maria Irene Fornes and Susan Sontag (circa 1960). Photo by Mort Schleifer, courtesy of Robert Steed. 9
- 3 Tango Palace at Theatre Genesis in New York (1973), directed by Fornes and Michael Smith. Bill Moor as Isidore (in white tunic with banderillas) and Ben Masters as Leopold. Fornes made the set out of bubble wrap she found on the street. Courtesy of Michael Smith. 13
- 4 Fornes at the Caffe Cino with (from left to right) composer Al Carmines, fellow Off-Off playwright Harry Koutoukas, and director Lawrence Kornfeld (circa 1965). Photo by James Gossage, reproduced courtesy of Billy Rose Theatre Collection, New York Public Library for the Performing Arts. 19
- 5 Fefu and Her Friends at American Place Theatre in New York (1978), directed by Fornes. Margaret Harrington as Julia and Rebecca Schull as Fefu. Photo by Martha Holmes, reproduced courtesy of Billy Rose

- Theatre Collection, New York Public Library for the Performing Arts. 68
- 6 Evelyn Brown (A Diary) at Theater for the New City (1980), directed by Fornes. Margaret Harrington (in plaid apron) and Aileen Passloff as two manifestations of the diarist and homemaker. Set design by Donald Eastman. Photos by Nathaniel Tileston. 89
- 7 The profane and the sacred: A Visit (1981) and The Trial of Joan of Arc in a Matter of Faith (1986), both directed by Fornes at Theater for the New City in New York. Mary Beth Lerner as the innocent Rachel (left) and Penelope Bodry as her rival, then lover Margery. Costume design by Gabriel Berry. Sheila Dabney as Joan and Bennes Mardenn (seated) and George Bartenieff as her inquisitors. Set design by Donald Eastman. Photos by Carol Halebian. 94
- 8 Two productions of The Danube, directed by Fornes: (top) at American Place Theatre in New York (1984), with Sam Gray as the Hungarian Mr. Sandor and Richard Sale as the American Paul Green; and (bottom) at Theater for the New City (1983), with Michael Sean Edwards as Paul Green, Margaret Harrington as Eve, and Arthur Williams as Mr. Sandor. Photos by Carol Halebian. 99
- 9 Two productions of Mud, directed by Fornes: (top) at Theater for the New City (1983) and (bottom) Milwaukee Repertory Theatre (1991). Scene 16: Mae (Patricia Mattick) confronts Henry (Alan Nebelthau) over her stolen money as Lloyd (Michael Sollenberger) urges her on. Photo by Carol Halebian. The final tableau: the dying Mae (Rose Pickering) reaches for the light as Lloyd (James Pickering) and Henry (Tom Blair) look on. Photo by Mark Avery, courtesy of Archives Department, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee Libraries. 103
- 10 Sarita at INTAR in New York (1984), directed by Fornes. Scene 3: young and pregnant, Sarita (Sheila Dabney, in school uniform) resists her mother Fela's (Carmen Rosario) effort to get her to marry

- the older Fernando (Rodolfo Diaz). Donald Eastman's set design for the INTAR production. Photos by Carol Halebian. 106
- 11 Mud at Signature Theatre Company (1999), directed by David Esbjornson. Scene 8 as emotigraph: Deirdre O'Connell as Mae and John Seitz as Henry. Photo by Susan Johann. 110
- 12 Abingdon Square at Studio Arena Theatre in Buffalo (1988), directed by Fornes. The final tableau: Marion (Susan Gibney) cradles the dying Juster (Edwin Owens) as Michael (Andrew Colteaux) looks on. Donald Eastman's set design for Juster's house on 10th Street. Photos by Jim Bush/jimbushphotography.com. 130
- 13 What of the Night? at Milwaukee Repertory Theatre (1989), directed by Fornes. A scene from Springtime: Rainbow (Kelly Maurer) takes care of the ailing Greta (Catherine Lynn Davis). The final tableau from Hunger: the Angel (Thomas Van Voorhees) brings rations for (from left to right) Ray (Daniel Mooney), Charlie (Kenneth Albers), Birdie (Catherine Lynn Davis), and Reba (Marilyn Frank). Photos by Mark Avery, courtesy of Archives Department, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee Libraries. 141
- 14 Oscar and Bertha at the Magic Theatre in San Francisco (1992), directed by Fornes. Regina Saisi as Eve and, behind her, Patricia Mattick as the ecstatic Bertha. Photo by David Allen/davidallenstudio.com. 145
- 15 Ibsen's Hedda Gabler at Milwaukee Repertory Theatre (1987), directed by Fornes. Marie Mathay as Hedda Gabler. Set design by Donald Eastman. Lighting design by Anne Militello. The cubicle (center), with raised door and inset window, represented the stove, which Hedda entered to burn Lovborg's manuscript. Photo courtesy of Milwaukee Repertory Theatre. 162
- 16 Maria Irene Fornes with four other American playwrights featured by Signature Theatre Company: (from left to right) Arthur Miller, John Guare, Edward Albee, Horton Foote. Photo by Sara Krulwich/The New York Times/Redux. 165

- 17 Letters from Cuba at Signature Theatre Company in New York (2000), directed by Fornes. In Cuba (above), Luis (Chris de Oni) reads a letter to his sister Fran (Tai Jimenez) in New York (below), as Joseph (Peter Starrett) looks on. Photo by Susan Johann. 168
- 18 Two productions of Drowning: (top) at Magic Theatre in San Francisco (1992), directed by Fornes; and at Signature Theatre Company in New York (1999), directed by David Esbjornson. Patrick Morris (top, head on table) and Marc Damon Johnson as Pea; Dennis Ludlow (top, seated) and Philip Goodwin as Roe; and Regina Saisi (top) and Jed Diamond as Stephen. Photos by (top) David Allen/davidallenstudio.com and (bottom) Sara Krulwich/The New York Times/Redux. 174

While every effort has been made to trace and acknowledge ownership of copyright material used in this volume, the Publishers will be glad to make suitable arrangements with any copyright holders whom it has not been possible to contact.

Acknowledgements

The research odyssey that has resulted in this book began at the Cornelia Street Cafe on May 23, 1985 when Edit Villareal and I interviewed Irene Fornes for an issue of Theater magazine. This first encounter catalyzed my decision to write my doctoral dissertation on Fornes at the Yale School of Drama, a project which benefitted from the wisdom and guidance of my advisor, Richard Gilman. At Yale, Stanley Kauffmann, Joel Schechter, Gitta Honegger, and especially Leon Katz sharpened my critical thinking and writing skills. Thanks is also due to Lynne Cummings for being there at the beginning.

In my work on Fornes over the years, a number of her colleagues and associates have done me the courtesy of sharing their experiences through formal interviews, casual conversations, and telephone and email communications. At one time or another, this has included Gwendolyn Alker, Devon Allen, George Bartenieff, Herbert Blau, Anne Bogart, Stephen Bottoms, Susan Letzler Cole, Migdalia Cruz, Sheila Dabney, Donald Eastman, June Ekman, Crystal Field, Susan Gregg, Rebecca High, Morgan Jenness, Larry Kornfeld, Janet Leuchter, Peter Littlefield, Bonnie Marranca, Marc Masterson, Patricia Mattick, Kelly Maurer, Michelle Memran, Anne Millitello, Aileen Passloff, Marc Robinson, Phyllis Jane Rose, Ed Setrakian, Alisa Solomon, and Caridad Svich. I thank all of them – and others who I must be overlooking – for their generosity and insight. In addition, I owe thanks to the many press representatives, publicity and marketing staffers at numerous theaters, and photographers who helped me gain access to production photographs and other Fornes materials.

A 2006–7 Research Incentive Grant from the Office of Sponsored Programs at Boston College made it possible for me to resume Fornes research for the purpose of writing this book. I am deeply grateful to the George A. and Eliza Gardner Howard Foundation for a 2008–9 fellowship that supported a leave of absence from teaching at a crucial stage of the writing process. Over the years, a series of undergraduate research fellows at Boston College – Jenn Wade, Claire Darby, Dan Brunet, Marin Kirby, Megan Rulison, Sarah Lunnie, Dave Bruin, Sarah Lang, Han Cho, Evan Cole, Cam Cronin, and Cara Harrington – provided valuable nuts-and-bolts assistance. I was aided by my students in a different way when I directed Abingdon Square at Boston College in 2004, and I thank the talented student cast – Mairin Lee, Chris Tocco, Dan O’Brien, Emma Stanton, Marianne Frapwell, Jonathan Popp, Patricia Noonan, Lee Trew, and cellist Adrian Curtin – for their curiosity and dedication. I also want to acknowledge the support and encouragement of Morgan Jenness, Michelle Memran, and Gwendolyn Alker, whose commitment to preserving the Fornes legacy has been essential.

Patricia Noonan, Cam Cronin, Erica Stevens Abbitt, and Amanda Fazzone read all or part of the manuscript and made helpful suggestions and corrections. I am grateful for their time and attention to detail. As series editors, Maggie Gale and Mary Luckhurst have exhibited an astonishing patience with me over the years, as has Ben Piggott at Routledge all through production.

Janet, I love you and thank you for everything.

Most of all, I thank Irene. When she first agreed to cooperate with my research, I am sure she had no idea how many times I would turn up to request another interview, seek permission again to sit in on rehearsals, listen to her speak on a panel, see one of her plays, ask for a copy of a manuscript or doublecheck some information. Her willingness to share with me the intricacies and the intimacies of her creative process is a gift that cannot be measured. I am forever grateful. When I finished writing this book, I went to visit Irene in the adult care home where she lives in upstate New York. At that point, her dementia made conversation impossible, but when I asked her if she knew any good songs, her face brightened and she burst into singing “Guantanamera.” I joined in on the chorus, as she sang verse after verse after verse. She loves to sing. She has joy in her heart and the song of life on the tip of her tongue. I am grateful for that, too.

Figure 1 Maria Irene Fornes in her Sheridan Square apartment with her mother Carmen (1990).

Overview

Maria Irene Fornes pioneered a new American playwriting. Between 1960 and 2000, she created more than fifty works for the stage, including comic sketches, one-act plays, full-length dramas, musical plays, site-specific pieces, devised works, libretti for opera, and adaptations of modernist classics. This volume is the first book to examine the full range of Fornes's work, including unpublished plays and later works that have received little critical attention. Breadth of discussion has taken precedence over a narrow-but-deep focus on the best-known plays, a decision that stems from the conviction that Fornes is best understood in the context of her complete oeuvre. One of the hallmarks of her playwriting is her perpetual experimentation with different tones, styles, and subjects. The focus of most scholarship on a few major plays – Fefu and Her Friends, Mud, The Conduct of Life, The Danube – has inadvertently narrowed the perception of her work. A mild corrective is offered here.

This study takes a developmental approach in two different senses. First, it traces the trajectory of Fornes's career and the evolution of her techniques and themes over the last four decades of the twentieth century. Each decade commands one of the book's four parts. Her 1960s plays are rooted in the explosion of Off-Off Broadway theater that took place in and around Greenwich Village at that time. They are playfully absurdist, full of logic and language games, whimsical ironies, zany transformations, and fanciful incongruities. Her 1970s plays suggest a discomfiting period of growth and a search for a more personal voice, one which was signaled by her pivotal, groundbreaking Fefu and Her Friends (1977).

This is the decade in which she honed her skills as a director, in part by creating devised pieces from documentary sources. The plays of the 1980s, the period of her most enduring work, achieve a crystalline balance of lyricism, emotionalism, and formalism that reflected “an increasingly expressive relation to dread, to grief and to passion” (Sontag 1986: 9). This is also when she emerged as an influential teacher of playwriting, celebrated for her innovative exercises designed to release a writer’s creative spirit. Her 1990s plays focus more explicitly on themes of survival and friendship, even as they revive a metatheatrical self-consciousness evident in the early work. These plays are ruminative, more personal, questioning, and sometimes tentative. They yearn for better days even as they manifest Fornes’s resilient love and respect for life itself.

The approach here is also developmental in its attention to the origins of specific Fornes plays and to her creative process in general. Her playwriting cannot be understood independent of two collateral practices that also defined her career: teaching and directing. Early on, Fornes learned that she could not tolerate somebody other than her directing the first production of her plays. Over time, she developed a directing style that was praised for its compositional rigor and choreographic precision. Even when critics were befuddled or alienated by her latest play, they often commented on the sure-handedness of her staging. Fornes also began teaching early in her career; her eventual affiliation with INTAR in New York and the Padua Hills Playwrights Festival outside of Los Angeles led her to refine a pedagogy of playwriting – what she called “the anatomy of inspiration” – that had widespread influence. She developed a popular series of exercises designed to help a novice playwright gain access to the imagination, and in teaching those exercises, she wrote along with her students, generating raw material that often provided the seeds for a new play. As an extension of her creative process, teaching and directing enabled Fornes to construct her own idiosyncratic system for taking a play from initial conception to opening night.

In this she benefitted from sustained relationships with a number of theater artists and producing organizations: Al Carmines, Lawrence Kornfeld, and the Judson Poets’ Theater; Max Ferra and INTAR; Crystal Field and Theater for the New City; Murray Mednick and Padua Hills Playwrights Festival; Julia Miles and the Women’s Project; the designers Donald Eastman, Anne Millitello, and Gabriel Berry; and a parade of actors over the years that included Florence Tarlow, Crystal Field, Aileen Passloff, Margaret Harrington, Sheila Dabney, and Patricia Mattick, among many others. This community assured that Fornes always had sympathetic collaborators and a supportive place to work, and she went on to receive numerous prizes, awards, and fellowships, most famously a total of nine Obie awards (for achievement in Off and Off-Off Broadway theater), more than anybody other than Sam Shepard.

The Fornes canon is bookended by two projects – La viuda (1961) and Letters from Cuba (2000) – based on letters written in Spanish by members of her family in Cuba. This coincidence draws attention not only to her Latina background but also to the importance in her plays of the reciprocal acts of writing and reading – “steps towards personhood” (Sofer 2006: 441) – and the operation of language in general. She came to New York City from Havana at age 15; when she took up writing fifteen years later, she wrote in English rather than her native Spanish. “My writing,” she later remarked, “has an off-center quality that is not exactly deliberate, but that I have not tried to change because I know its origin lies in the temperament and language of my birth” (Delgado and Svich 1999: 268). Fornes’s painstaking syntax, as well as her use of rhythm and repetition and a limited vocabulary, produces a dramatic idiom that is lyrical and deceptively simple. Her characters recognize that language has the power to transform. The erudite Dr. Kheal observes, “Words change the nature of things. A thing not named and the same thing named are two different things” (Fornes 1971: 68). In Lust (1989), the neurasthenic Helena dislikes a play she saw because of “the words the author used ... Words that are not real words. Like ‘likewise.’ False words that have nothing behind them ... No thinking goes into words like that ... People feel good using them, but they feel a little cheated later, debilitated. If you speak without meaning, you feel debilitated” (Fornes 2008: 137).

Fornes’s characters speak with meaning, knowing that to name something is to change it, but the process is delicate and often difficult. Fornes described it metaphorically:

It is as if the words are dampness in a porous substance – a dampness which becomes liquid and condenses. As if there is a condensation that is really the forming of words. I want to catch the process of the forming of thought into words.

(Cummings 1985: 55)

This “struggle to translate thought into language, writing into speech, speech into action, action into coherent being” (Sofer 2006: 441) shapes the action of many plays. “Character is revealed through catechism” (Sontag 1986: 8), and tropes of literacy, language, and learning abound as part of the effort to capture the process of coming to thought. For her characters, this is tantamount to bringing self into being, which for some means vanquishing an existential vagueness. In that effort they demonstrate a rare combination of fragility and resilience, determination and helplessness, dignity and shame. They aspire to a purity that approaches the divine, yet they are subject to carnal impulses and adverse social conditions that seem to doom them to failure or at least to a profound frustration. If her characters suffer, they also benefit from Fornes’s signature compassion for them.

For Fornes, life itself is so precious that her theater, in effect, wants to prolong life by slowing down time and zeroing in on stillness. Her plays are not concerned with the forward thrust of a narrative action or the strategic rush of a character towards some prized goal. Leading Fornes critic Bonnie Marranca (1984: 30) was among the first to credit her with lifting “the burden of psychology, declamation, morality, and sentimentality from the concept of character,” freeing her figures from definition by intention or motivation and instead depicting them in “scenes that create a single emotive moment, as precise in what it does not articulate as in what does get said.” These isolated moments of being – what this study will call “emotigraphs” – are the building blocks of Fornes’s unique dramaturgy, juxtaposed one to the next without transition in a manner that asks the spectator to “bridge the gap” or “connect the dots” in order to complete the theatrical picture.

Fornes’s depiction of isolated moments when the sensuous and the spiritual collide is informed by the social and demographic profile of her characters. They are defined as much by gender, ethnicity, class, and sexuality as they are by inner struggle. The personal and the political are radically intertwined, but at a moment when multiculturalism and identity politics came to play an increasing role in critical discourse, Fornes herself was wary about being categorized strictly as a woman or a Latina or a lesbian playwright. She neither proclaimed nor denied these identities. Despite her advocacy for Hispanic playwrights, her connection to feminist dramaturgy, her use of Catholic imagery and themes, her focus on the lumpenproletariat, and the sustained critique of heteronormative relationships in her plays, Fornes resisted classification by orthodoxy. Ethnography, queer theory, feminism, Marxist criticism, and other modes of analysis have much to reveal about her drama, but in the moment of performance Fornes sought a more visceral than ideological connection to events onstage.

To this day, Fornes's plays continue to be widely produced around the United States by small professional theaters, fringe companies, and university groups. Her work has always been revered by a coterie of in-the-know theater artists, critics, scholars, and students. But after a fleeting moment on Broadway in 1966 and the successful Off Broadway run of Promenade in 1969, she had no commercial productions and only a smattering of appearances at the growing network of not-for-profit resident regional theaters around the United States. Over the decades, she became more and more conspicuous as an outsider artist, a holdover from the 1960s whose work was ignored by the mainstream theater establishment. The average theatergoer has never heard of her. In a 1992 Village Voice essay titled "The Aging Playwright and the American Theater," Bonnie Marranca (1992a: 94) expressed outrage that "at the age of 62, after three decades of a richly committed life in the theater, Maria Irene Fornes is still working on the margins."

There is no simple explanation for this neglect. American philistinism is certainly a part of it. Marranca blamed the preoccupation with "new" playwrights and the failure of mainstream institutions to integrate proven experimentalists. The symbiosis between her playwrighting and directing makes the merits of the texts themselves less apparent to directors and producers "shopping around" for an interesting play. There is also an economy of scale at work: most Fornes plays are shorter than a conventional full-length play and better suited to smaller studio theaters than large mainstage houses. This poses programming challenges for producers who need to round out a full evening's entertainment or fill more than a hundred seats a night. Still, the single biggest reason for Fornes's marginal status is the seemingly esoteric nature of the work itself:

If Fornes remains on the periphery of the mainstream, it is because large, popular audiences come to the theater to have their most cherished beliefs reinforced, not challenged. They do not want to examine the implications of gender hierarchy or the dynamics of patriarchy too closely. Fornes's refusal to compromise, her refusal to write to please men, her rejection of romantic sentimentality ensures that she will remain on the fringe.

(Schuler 1990: 227)

The diversity of Fornes's plays, which makes them almost impossible to collectively "brand" by theme or milieu, is perhaps one reason why her work – though certainly fit to stand alongside that of Albee, Shepard, and others – has often been overlooked or underappreciated by critics. Another is simply the continuing, prejudicial tendency to assume that Fornes's own, multiply-othered status as a woman, a lesbian, and a Latina must somehow render her a playwright with "minority" appeal.

(Bottoms 2004b: 22)

Could it be that Fornes is underproduced (for a writer of her stature) precisely because her characters rebel with willful opacity against American theatrical notions about the clarity of intention?

(Ruhl 2001: 194)

In short, a Fornes play insists on being taken on its own terms.

The main objective of this study is to make clear what those terms are by chronicling the transformation of her Off-Off Broadway ethic beyond its early communal preoccupations into a highly personal artistic vision. In performance, a Fornes play makes specific demands on a spectator, which include:

a particular attentiveness or receptivity, a readiness to engage with the performance in ways which cannot be understood as