To John Skelton, for being my inspiration to write a book, read the classics, watch the birds, and live without regrets.

Acknowledgments

Thank you to JoAnn Guilmett from the Plymouth State University Lamson Library and Learning Commons for helping me to create the initial presentation on which this book is based. Thank you to Elaine Allard for teaching the librarians of New Hampshire about the ideas behind a learning commons.

Thank you to Russ Harland, who read and reread the manuscript during one cold and stormy February vacation. You are the best editor, thesaurus, fire builder, snow blower, and husband a girl could ask for. I'm the lucky one, and I couldn't have done this without you!

Thank you to Casey Brough for always making me laugh, helping to make my vision a reality, and for being the best library Web site designer anywhere (frealz). He'll be finishing his MLS in 2011 and looking for a library of his own. I'm just saying.

Thank you also to Mark Halloran for the support he has given to the library, and to Dr. Ethel Gaides for the support she has given to the librarians.

Thank you to Bruce Parsons, Maura Dougherty, Aaron Blais, Lena MacLean, Bob Schrier, Kathy Boyle, the PRHS book club, and the amazing faculty and administration at Plymouth Regional High School.

Thank you to Erika Frank for sharing a well-designed vision in librarianship, and to Heather Armitage for inspiring me to keep writing.

Thank you to Susan Ballard, Kristin Whitworth, Sara Zoë Patterson, Dot Grazier, Sharon Silva, Kathy Lane, and the other librarians from NHSLMA. You all make me proud to be a librarian in New Hampshire!

Thank you and big love especially to Cheryl Downing, Janice Whitaker, Everett Colburn, Martha Borsh, and John Skelton.
